Enameling Displayed At ACHS

On display during the entire month of October in the Appomattox County High School library was a show of enameling by Roberta Brooks. Ms. Brooks is a senior at Longwood College, Farmville, majoring in art education. She has spent the past five weeks student teaching in the art department at the high school.

Enameling is the process of applying a specially prepared glass to metal and then fusing the two together through the use of heat.

Various techniques displayed in the show include: (1) Limoges, or wet inlay, moistened enamels are applied freely onto a metal surface in a thin uniform coat. (2) Cloisonne'e from the French cloisons, meaning "partitioned areas" or cells. In this technique, the enamels are separated from each other by thin metal wires, usually of sterling silver. The wires are fixed upright to the surface to form a number of cells which are then filled with enamel until the colors reach the level of the wires.

The art of enameling has a long heritage and tradition. The ingredients used are not as precious as gold or silver but the combination of small scale along with the beauty of enamels have identified them historically as precious metals.
